

Clarification cases are not a capture problem.

Reading an invoice is a solved problem. What costs two to three hours a day is everything that happens afterwards — and nobody talks about that part.

Two to three hours. Every day.

An accounts payable clerk walked me through how she spends her mornings. Not on accounting. On follow-up questions. The company had a good capture solution — recognition well past ninety-five percent. Still.

What a document contains, we know.
What should happen to it, we do not.

Most conversations about incoming invoices circle around recognition rates, because those are easy to measure. But recognition has not been an open question for years. What comes after is a completely different kind of problem.

Nothing exotic. The working day.

Price differs

two cents of rounding or an unmaintained price break

Quantity differs

over-delivered, no tolerance set

Invoice here, receipt not or the other way round

Freight, surcharges, discount

lines without a PO line, each with its own logic

Capture knows what is on the paper.

Only the ERP knows if it is right.

Not one of these can be decided from the document. You need the purchase order, the goods receipt, the price break, the vendor master, the tolerance rules. None of that sits in the capture solution. It sits in Dynamics 365.

Companies post differently.

- 01 Vendor invoice — without PO reference
 - 02 Invoice register — with PO reference, through the workflow
 - 03 Pending vendor invoice — three-way match
 - 04 General journal — rent, insurance, telephone
-

Nine out of ten invoices never see a person.

Because the clarification cases are decided first.

Against PO, receipt, tolerance.

Against rules that already exist.

Two to three hours become minutes.

Only what truly needs a decision.

Capture reads. The ERP decides.

FlexxLink Invoice Capture — the client in Dynamics 365 that receives recognised documents and decides the clarification cases where the knowledge sits. Release in Q4. Built by the Soluvine development team I have worked with since Damgaard.

Four entry points	vendor invoice to general journal
Release	Q4 2026
The full post	restless365.com/post-invoice-capture
Horst Fischer · restless365@outlook.com	